

Date: 2011-06-01

Title: Notes on hentaigana

Source: Japan

Status: FYI

References: N 3698

Expected Action: none

WG 2 received an (apparently preliminary) proposal to encode hentaigana (変体仮名) in UCS (N3698.) The first reaction from Japan was "we have no strong requirements on hentaigana."

After two years, there is some discussion in Japan on the possibility to have a standard set of hentaigana. However, the objective seems different from that of N3698.

The discussion is taking place in a context of Japanese e-Government project, and the objective is to allow electronic exchange of names of Japanese citizen. Until prohibited by a law in 1948, it was not unusual to name a kid using hentaigana. As a result, a Japanese citizen whose age is above sixty something may have a name containing hentaigana. Although the widely accepted practice today is to use ordinary hiragana in place of hentaigana when writing those names with PC or other electronic devices, some Japanese government agencies have positions to consider such substitution are unacceptable in some legal processes, and it is being recognized as an issue when promoting e-Government project. One possible solution may be to accept the substitution, and another is to encode required hentaigana in the standard coded character set.

At this moment, Japan National Body has no further information on the issue. If the Japanese government takes the direction to encode hentaigana, Japanese National Body will collaborate to produce a proposal.

(End of Document)